.....Acknowledgments

I would like to thank acquisitions editor Kelly Reed for giving me the opportunity to write this book. I could not have finished this project without her words of encouragement during my bouts of writer's block and procrastination. I also want to thank two exchange students from Korea, Gyungbae Jeon and Dong-guen Kim Oppas, who came to my rescue and supplied some cool new slang terms that I've gladly added to the book. I must thank my parents (I am Korean, albeit a hyphenated "American," who still values family and the traditional wisdom they've instilled in me), especially my dad, for his sense of humor that I've enjoyed and embraced over the years. Thanks to Matt Kent, Gene Desmidt, Miyo Nakamura, Borami Lee, Krissy McClain, Jeffrey Ezell, Drew Dibble, Analisa Lono and Lauren Adelman, my best friends, for believing in me.

Most importantly, I'll be super grateful for the rest of my life to Jinny Baek, my awesome sister. The knowledge she gathered during the two years she spent teaching English in Korea proved to be invaluable. She corrected and refined my work, which would have been dull and humorless if she hadn't spent the time reviewing the manuscript and rewrites. (You can tell that she's standing right next to me dictating the words as I type.)

Last, I thank you, the readers, who are so curious about the Korean language that you've bought this little primer. Yes, you have the right to learn how to say, "Let's have sex!" or "Suck my dick!" in Korean!

USING THIS BOOK

Whether you're an exchange-student headed to Korea to study and broaden your worldview, or a frat bro looking to drink your ass off and feed your raging case of Yellow Fever, you're gonna need to know more than just how to say "hi" and "thank you." You need to be able to order a drink, pick up a date and tell a douchebag to go "suck on your mama's titties" more (ssibalnom, gaseo eomma jeot-ina deo bbaldawa; 씨발놈, 가서 었마 젓이나 더 빨다와)!

This book is designed to teach you all those sorts of words, the ones that your professors were too scared to teach you, those phrases too raunchy to appear in any textbook and all those expressions you would never, ever say in front of your mother—in short, all the sayings that you actually give a shit about. Because let's be honest, when was the last time you were hanging out with friends and felt the need to say "I live in the red house. I enjoy tennis. Where is the library?" Nobody talks this way, least of all Koreans, who—once they warm up to you—can be some of the most foulmouthed motherfuckers you'll ever meet. So let's get real for a change.

Dirty Korean is the product of a lifetime of vulgar language picked up from lots of bad company and many a poor life choice—none of which I regret today, however, because it all led to this little gem of a book that I now pass on to you, dear reader. Use it wisely and at your own peril.

It's been arranged thematically, and each English phrase is followed by its Korean pronunciation and written characters. I've also included important and interesting tidbits on Korean culture to give you a better understanding of the phrases, places and social customs you'll encounter during your travels. That's because I'd hate to have you mistake a sarcastic pickup line for a verbal slap-in-the-face and lose your chance at baggin' some hottie. So now, go forth—take your Dirty Korean and get dirty with it!

.....Quick and Dirty Korean Pronunciation

Korean is super easy to read and write once you master the 24 characters that, when put together, make the sounds of the Korean language. If you're a quick learner, you'll probably master them in about an hour. The letters are all geometric shapes that were created by King Sejong in the 1400s.

TONES

To most foreigners, Korean just sounds angry or whiny. Koreans tend to speak with a stiff intonation, as opposed to the more fluid sounds of English speakers. One way to practice your Korean accent is to drag your tongue at the end of your syllables to make the sounds a little whinier (the tilde after the hangeul means you should drag out the syllable).

Annyeong~

안녕~

CONSONANTS

The Korean alphabet has 14 consonants that are similar to those in English. However, there are double consonants that are pronounced differently. Whenever you see doubled letters, make sure to speak with a strong emphasis that almost make you sound angry.

ㄱ = g, k, like in “gorgeous” / ㄲ = kk

ㄴ = n, like in “norm”

ㄷ = d, t, like in “drum” / ㄸ = dd, tt

ㄹ = r, l, like in “rude”

ㅁ = m, like in “morning”

ㅂ = b, p, like in “breasts” / ㅃ = bb like in “pepper”

ㅅ = s, like in “sex” / ㅆ = ss

ㅇ = ng, like in “meeting” (but silent if at the beginning of the word)

ㅈ = j, like in “joy” / ㅉ = jj

ㅊ = ch, like in “chihuahua”

ㅋ = k, like in “key”

ㅌ = t, like in “toy”

ㅍ = p, like in “punch”

ㅎ = h, like in “horny”

VOWELS

The Korean dialect has 10 vowels. It can be difficult to pronounce them at first because of the subtle similarity of their sounds. But once you get to hang of it, it's pretty easy.

HOW TO READ KOREAN)))

Korean can be written in either the standard Western style (left to right in horizontal rows) or in vertical columns reading from top to bottom and right to left, although the latter is rarely used nowadays.

When actually reading the characters, remember that letters (consonants and vowels) never stand alone—consonants are always combined with a vowel (or a vowel and another consonant) to form syllable blocks. These blocks always start with a consonant followed by a vowel to the right of or beneath it. Note: When the consonant ㅇ is placed at the beginning of a block, it's silent.

You pronounce the sound of each letter in a syllable block from left to right first, then read any letters that are at the bottom half of the block. The bottom letters are called batchim (받침), supporting consonants used at the end of a syllable block to form the sound. For example, 헝글 (hangeul). It reads:

ㅎ (h)

ㅏ (a)

ㄴ (n)

ㄱ (g)

ㅡ (eu)

ㅇ (l)

Then try and 헝글다 (swipda) = ㅅ (s), ㅍ (wi), ㅂ (p), ㄷ (d), ㅏ (a).

You just said 헝글 헝글다, which means “Korean is easy!” The learning's gonna be so fast that you'll be ordering soju and negotiating with a prostitute in no time!

ㅏ = a, like in “father”

ㅑ = ya, like in “yahoo”

ㅓ = eo, like in “fuck”

ㅕ = yeo, like in “y'all”

ㅗ = oh, like in “old”

ㅛ = yo, like in “yo mama”

ㅜ = u, like in “moon”

ㅠ = yu, like in “you”

ㅡ = eu, there is no sound like this in English. Just put your teeth together and pull your lips while you try to make this vowel sound.

ㅣ = i, like in “lily” or “silly”

Also, Korean vowels combine to make different sounds such as,

ㅏ (ㅏ + ㅣ) = ae, like in “bayer”

ㅑ (ㅑ + ㅣ) = yaе, like in “yeah”

ㅓ (ㅓ + ㅣ) = e, like in “never”

ㅕ (ㅕ + ㅣ) = ye, like in “Yale”

ㅗ (ㅗ + ㅏ) = wa, like in “wash”

ㅛ (ㅛ + ㅏ) = wae, like in “whey”

ㅜ (ㅜ + ㅣ) = oe, also like in “whey”

ㅝ (ㅝ + ㅓ) = wo, like in “woman”

ㅞ (ㅞ + ㅓ) = we, like in “wedding”

ㅟ (ㅟ + ㅣ) = wi, like in “wing”

ㅠ (ㅠ + ㅣ) = ui, like in “ooh-ee”

.....Hello

Annyeonghaseyo

안녕하세요

Unlike some languages, it's cool to use Korean slang with complete strangers. But only if you're older than they are. If you're not, or it's questionable, you best stick to formalities and old-fashioned "hellos." Korea is just age-deferential like that. If you're with friends though, all bets are off—feel free to get slangy as you wanna be.

Like in any language, you always gotta find out how your peeps been doin' when you haven't seen 'em in a while. Don't be too surprised, though, when Koreans talk bluntly about how fat your ass has gotten since they last saw you. Changes to your physical appearance are considered fair game for discussion. Don't be offended. It just is what it is, fatty.

.....Please

Budi / Jebal

부디 / 제발

Koreans don't really use the word "please" unless it's in an extremely formal setting or out of sheer desperation ("Please don't sodomize me with that rusty ice pick, Sir"). Because "please" isn't used much in their language, Koreans are often thought to be rude or demanding when they're in the States. But they're not; it's just their language.

친구 만드시기

If you want to make friends in Korea, you don't go up to strangers and just start talking to them. That's creepy. Instead, you meet people through internet clubs such as meetup.com or through Facebook events. Also, you can make friends at different clubs in Hongdae or Itaewon while you get drunk and dance with strangers. If you're looking to hook up, clubs are definitely the way to go. Korean girls will throw themselves at

SILLYEHAPNIDA / JAMSIMANYO

식례합니다 / 잠시만요

"Excuse me" can be used as an apology or for asking a favor. But don't worry about saying "excuse me" every time you bump into someone in Korea. It's a small country with a high density of people. Shit happens. Just keep walking and pretend like it never happened. Also, don't get offended if some ol' ladies bump into you or cut you off in a subway line. They're trained to be like that all through their existence. These ajummas, old ladies, are all like that. Be the better person and smile! Or you can cuss them out and give them a finger. Your choice.

사진

Since the digital camera revolution, Koreans have become obsessed with taking pictures. You'll have to be patient when they take pics of their meals before they eat at restaurants, which has become something of a tradition. You can't touch the food before the girls take pictures of it! They'll chop your hands off, so be careful. And if you want to take a photo of some of your Korean friends, know that Koreans have a huge complex about their head/face size. It's common to see people fight over who gets to stand in the background of a portrait to make their head look smaller than everybody else's. That's also why you might see people covering their cheeks with a hand or bangs. And when you pose, don't forget to make the V-for-Victory sign with your hand before the shutter snaps!

If your only exposure to Koreans is the Hollywood stereotype of a pissed-off liquor store owner with a gun, you may think all Koreans have a bug up their ass. If you can do that, you'll find yourself well on your way to some lasting friendships.

.....Family

Gajok

가족

Family is extremely important to Korean culture. It's just recently that the divorce rate has gone up, resulting in all different types of family dynamics. However, you can't just ignore the old saying, "Blood is thicker than water." Koreans put their family matters before any other business. That's why in some Korean soap operas, a girl might have a baby with a guy she's just met to fulfill a dying grandma's wish ("Tada! Here's your grandson, even though I hate the husband you arranged for me!"). Korean society is heavy-duty with showing respect for elders. At school, being just one year older really creates a huge inequality among students of different ages—it gives the older students the right to lord over the younger ones. They may order the “youngsters” around and even bully the poor little souls into doing anything they want. Maybe that’s why Korean people can bluntly ask you “How old are you?” the first minute you meet them.

Grandmother

Halmeoni

할머니

When Grandma comes up in conversation, Koreans distinguish which side of the family (mom's or dad's) their grandparent represents. Dad's mom is called chinhalmehoni (친할머니), while mom's mom is referred to as woehalmehoni (외할머니).

Grandma

Halmae

할매

This is more affectionate and is used in rural areas.

SIBLING RIVALRY)))

It's considered rude to call your older siblings by their first name. Instead you have to use their honorific titles "Brother" or "Sister." But it's all good for older siblings to call their younger siblings by their first names. Even if a twin sister is just two minutes younger, she still has to address her elder wombmate as "Sister." This curious bit of culture led to the following exchange in Mary Kate and Ashley Go to Seoul:

"Mary Kate?"

"Mary Kate?"

"메리 케이 트?"

"Yes, Sister?"

"Wae eonni?"

"왜, 언니?"

"Get me my bulimia bucket!"

.....Titles

Hocching

호칭

Like with your siblings, it's considered disrespectful to call someone older than you by their first name. So titles like Mr., Mrs. or Miss are typically used when you're not sure of the other person's age or assume they're older than you. This can get you into trouble, though, if you end up addressing a girl with a title when she's actually younger than you. In effect, you've basically called her an old-looking hag and have ruined any chance you had of ever hooking up with her. Congratulations.

The title game is dangerous ground; tread lightly. These ruinous pitfalls can be avoided by calling every woman you may want to sleep with "sweet thang" (eepeuni; 이쁜이). Nothing can possibly go wrong by doing this!

Unlike America's cowboy, go-it-alone mentality, Korea is very much a group society. You can almost always put anyone into the group they belong in and label them accordingly. Koreans won't be insulted if you stereotype them based on who they hang out with. They feel more comfortable being defined by groups than as individuals. This can be confusing or insulting to politically correct American ears, but it's a real timesaver in Korea.

Bean paste girl (gold digger)

Doenjangnyeo

된장녀

This term comes from someone who can't distinguish shit from bean paste! A bean paste girl is typically superficial, shallow, materialistic and obsessed with brand-name goods. Some even use their parents' or sugar daddy/mama's money to buy stuff to make themselves look glamorous. Because they're so blinded by brand names, they're ill-equipped to make judgment calls on the actual quality of an item. Therefore, they would even purchase shit if they hear it's a brand-name bean paste.

When it comes to partying, Koreans are the Irish of Asia. They even get all red-faced when they get drunk, which is often. Unlike in the States, though, Koreans don't just park it at one bar. They won't stop until they've gone to at least four places to drink soju, beer, makgeolli (Korean rice drink), wine and hard liquor. In fact, partying is such an integral part of Korean culture that you can't say you've truly experienced Korea until you've gotten drunk as shit off cheap soju, performed bad karaoke, then watched yourself on YouTube (thanks to your thoughtful friends) singing and dance to Korean songs you've never heard before.

.....Where Koreans get down

Nolgeori

놀거리

Koreans don't just go on bar crawls. Oh no, they're far more determined about their drunken debauchery than that. After dinner (which itself will feature copious amounts of drinking), on a typical Korean night out, you'll hit up a plethora of bars for a spectacular evening of drunken imbibing before moving onward to a noraebang, or karaoke house, where you'll get even more plastered while performing slurred renditions of '80s pop hits. If you're still on your feet after that, you might cap things off at a club for yet more drinking or—if you need to sober up—the jimjilbang, a 24-hour sauna where you can leech all that delicious poison out of your body.

Bar

Suljip

술집

In areas like Hongdae, a district surrounding an artsy university, there are strips of bars catering to your every mood—fusion bars, traditional Korean bars, Westernized bars, Japanese bars and karaoke bars. If you don't like the joint you've meandered into, just pick up and move on to the next!

Karaoke house

Noraebang

노래방

Your voice might suck, but honestly, in Korea nobody gives a shit. Karaoke is something of a Korean national pastime, and it's always done in private rooms where you can butcher Journey songs with nobody but your friends around to make fun of you. And it only costs about $10 an hour to rent a room!

You sing well.

Norae jom hane.

노래 잘 하네.

Club

Club

클럽

Guys and girls from 18 to 30 go to the club to dance their asses off. (Well, dancing your ass off you can do at home in front of your mirror—I don't want to see any jiggy asses). If you are looking for a hot one-night stand, a drunken friend you won't remember the next day, or if you are just plain too drunk to care, there are great clubs all over. Note: Since techtonic is so hot in Korea, all the clubs will play similar music. Hongdae's filled with tons of options, but Itaewon's the place to go if you are looking for Korean girls ready to throw themselves at handsome foreigners. It's also the place to go to if you are sick of short yellow faces with straight black hair—all the foreigners hang out there. Gangnam's another good place to check out; it's also home to two well-known hip-hop clubs, Harlem and NB.

Are there any hot girls at the club?

Clube mul joa?

ID check / dress code check

Mul gwalli

물간리

Bouncers in Korea do an ID check and, more importantly, enforce a dress code. So you better look bangin' if you want to get in!

Nightclub

Night

나이트

The difference between nightclubs and clubs is a fat wallet. At clubs, guys can use charm and dance skills to hook up. But if men want to expend less energy on the game and have some Benjamins to throw around, they head to the nightclubs, typically referred to as "night." All the girls are hotties who get free admission and drinks because, well, they're hotties. Guys shell out a ridiculously high cover to enter and then they also get to pay for all the drinks inside. But all that green being thrown around means you get to stare at, talk to and/or dance with the pretty things all you want. You can even ask a waiter to bring your favorite girl to your table—without fear of a "no way, Jose."

Booking

Booking

부킹

This nightclub practice involves tipping waiters who will then escort women to men's tables, where chicks imbibe expensive drinks in exchange for their company. The crazy thing is that even though the babes know what's going on, the chosen women still put up a show of resistance, you know, for modesty's sake. While a female might "book" a guy, it's pretty rare (she'd probably be considered a ho, and therefore undesirable). Of course men do try to get the women drunk enough to leave the club for more intimate places. Wink, wink!

Club promoter

Bbikki

ㅁㄷ

Club promoters often approach you on the street with special offers or promotions.

Playground

Noriteo

놀이터

There are playgrounds in nearly every apartment complex in Korea and they often turn into gathering places for underage teenagers to get together and drink at night.

Rooftop

Oksang

옥상

Seoul is covered by tall apartment buildings. Most of them are over 25-floors tall; it's fun to sneak up to the rooftop of the building and party like a rock star above the city.

Sauna

Jjimjilbang

찜뽕방

Korean saunas, with partitioned bathhouses for men and women, are open 24/7. Normally used for family nights, saunas have different common areas to choose from: one room may have PCs or DVDs, another manicures or massages. You can even pick up a snack or sleep here—like if you are too drunk and broke to catch a cab home. It's only about $10 a night, and you'll even look pretty presentable the next day.

Playroom

Noribang

놀이방

Teenagers rent these common rooms at motels; each comes complete with a shower, a bed, and a PlayStation. It's a great place to meet up and chill. You can even throw a fabulous party here—just add balloons, ribbon, dresses and, of course, booze.

PC café

PC bang

피씨방

A PC café provides some of the fastest Internet service in the world. Kids love to go here to play video games. You can even catch some gamers skipping school to play online games here. Fan of WoW? Check out the PC cafés.

Manga café

Manhwabang

만화방

These are like Korean libraries for people who like to dick off reading magazines and Manga instead of studying. You can smoke and eat in here, too.

Video room

Bidiobang

비디오방

These rooms with a couch and a TV are where underage students go to supposedly watch movies but really just end up having sex.

Wine bar

Wainba

와인바

Sophisticated white collar people (i.e., pretentious jerks) like to eat at these elegant wine bars. Take your girlfriend to a glamorous wine bar with eye-poppingly high prices, and she just might give you what you've been waiting for.

Hof

Hopeu

호프

This is a bar/restaurant geared toward drinking and eating. This is from the German word hoff meaning a "place."

Trailer bar

Pojangmacha

포장마차

Trailers are typically outdoor tents on wheels that provide street food like chicken feet and soju. These places are usually open until 4 or 5 in the morning, and they're where Koreans without a lot of money go to get drunk and talk to friends.

.....Totally wasted

Sul chwiham

술 취함

Koreans don't fuck around when it comes to getting their drink on. Getting plastered is an art in Korea, and certain customs must be followed. For instance, it's traditional that someone else at the table pours your drink (and you theirs)—it's a gesture of respect and friendship. If you do it yourself, you're rejecting this. So be sure to keep a steady supply of friends on hand, because unless you're a pussy lightweight, you're gonna need a lot of drinks poured your way.

It's where most Japanese tourists come to buy stuff so if you are a shopper, you have to check it out. In Korea, you never refuse a drink poured by an elder (you know, that whole age-hierarchy thing again). So if you're partying with older friends, you may be in for a rough night. Hopefully they'll take pity on you and stop pouring your drinks before you end up taking a transvestite to a love motel. But if they don't, at least you'll have a funny story to tell the next day. Sul game

술 게임

These games are extremely popular in Korea. They're like beer pong, but they're done at a bar and usually played sitting down.

The Game of Death

Deo game ob desseu

더 케잇어브 데트

A group will often start out with this game to get each other drunk fast. It's pretty much a no-brainer: You chant "the game of death" and point at someone you'd like to see drunk. The one with most fingers pointed at has to drink. It's crude but effective at getting everyone fucked up.

Titanic (aka, Sake Bomb)

Titanic

타이타닉

This is like a sake bomb (with soju instead). But you don't just make a soju bomb (poktanju) and down it—all drinkers participate in creating the Titanic. First, pour half a glass of beer. Then put an empty soju glass inside the glass of beer. People then take turns pouring as much soju as they want into the beer glass. The person who sinks the soju glass has to drink the whole thing. Bottom's up!

Black Rose

Heukjangmi

The exact opposite of the Black Night, this is when a man finds a woman to take a shot for him in a drinking game. But if she refuses, he has to take double shots.

King Game

King game

킹게임

Gather chopsticks (yes, Koreans eat with chopsticks, so you would have them) equal to the number of participants (e.g., five

The person with the K-chopstick can make the others do whatever he or she wants. For example, the king can make number 1 and 4 kiss each other. If you are both dudes, well, enjoy the hot breath.

The Baskin Robbins 31

Baskin Robbins Sseotiwon

베스킨 로빈스 서리원

Someone starts counting from 1, and the next person continues counting, in order, saying either 1, 2 or 3 numbers per turn. So if you begin by saying “1” the next player can say “2,” “2, 3” or “2, 3, 4.” The person who gets to 31 has to drink.

Unlike in America where there's a pill for everything, Korean culture isn't big on drugs, recreational or otherwise. Even over-the-counter medications like pain relievers aren't widely used. That's not to say that nobody does drugs in Korea. It's just not a mainstream thing that you hear talked about a lot.

Although weed is generally a pretty harmless drug and treated as such in most of the world, in Korea it falls under into the same category as hard drugs like cocaine and heroin, and the cops treat it all the same. That's right, a measly little joint could add up to serious jail time—so toké at your own risk.

Cigarettes are very popular in Korea. Not surprising, since every other drug is so hard to get. And at just $2 a pack, how can you not smoke them? Korean cigs are not as toxic as the usual U.S. brands (like Marlboro), probably because most of the brands are charcoal-filtered. There are TONS of different brands in Korea but these are a few of the most popular that are widely available:

.....The Korean ideal

Hanguk minam mi-in

한국 미남 미인

Koreans are increasingly adopting Western ideals of beauty. They want to be taller and skinnier, possess a higher and pointier nose, and have whiter skin. In fact, Westerners are big hits in Korea. So if you're striking out in the good ol' U.S. of A. because you're not "exotic looking" enough, you might be a home run in Korea. But if you're hoping to find a Korean who will love you for your inner beauty, wake up. Koreans are very superficial. So superficial, in fact, that the nation ranks number one in plastic surgery per capita.

As mentioned above, Koreans want to look more Western. Korean men want to look like Michelangelo's statue of David and women want to be Venus. So naturally, Koreans all want different eyes, noses, mouths and ears than they already have.

Literally, "Can pumpkins become watermelons with lines?"

Koreans consider pumpkins ugly but watermelons handsome. So even if an ugly person puts on beautiful clothes, lots of makeup and expensive, brand-name accessories, he or she will never be beautiful. At least, that's what they used to say, but if you spend your life savings on multiple plastic surgeries, you might just be able to get prettier.

Your legs are as short as a dresser's!

Neo wanjeon jangnong dariya!

너 다리 안전 장롱 다리야!

If you bend over and look at the bottom of your dresser, you can see how small the space in between the ground and the dresser is, because most dressers have short legs.

Holy shit, your head is the size of a watermelon!

Uwa, jenjang neo meoriga wanjeon subagiya!

우와, 젠장, 너 머리가 완전 수박이야!

Korean watermelons are smaller than the ginormous fruits you see in U.S. supermarkets—they're about as big as jack-o-lantern pumpkins.

You have radish legs!

Neo wanjeon mudariya!

너 완전 무다리야!

One of most popular sayings used to insult girls with short, fat legs.

Korea doesn't have many public restrooms. Lots of restaurants and bars share bathrooms and require a key to get in. Because of the scarcity of public johns, it's tough to find a nice place to pop a squat. So you better learn the phrases below to show how bad you gotta use it!

It seems like every culture has its own sayings about shit that would confuse the hell out of foreigners. For instance, what would a F.O.B. Korean think if you told him that he was “full of shit” or that his haircut was “the shit”? It’s no different in Korea, where they have their own special phrases. So keep your ears peeled for these little colloquial nuggets.

There’s no good translation for this since it’s simply the onomatopoeic sound of shit coming out of your buttock. Saying it basically means that you just took a shit.

You are the shit, your shit is the thickest!

Neo jalnasseo, ne ttong gulgeo!

Like most people, Koreans have getting laid on their minds 24/7. Talking openly about sex, however, is a different story. It's still pretty taboo there. And when it does happen, it's usually as an embarrassed euphemism or in English, because talking dirty just comes more naturally in fucking English.

Thanks to the Internet (i.e., porn), lots of new sexual terms are starting to flood the language. So your Korean friends will probably understand you now when you start to explain your bukkake fetish. But what are Koreans to do with this newfound sexual awakening? Most Koreans live with their parents until they tie the knot, so bringing home a booty call to try out their new reverse-blumpkin moves is out of the question.

That's where the "love motel" (러브 모텔) comes in. These rendezvous points may sound sleazy to Westerners but are a fact of life for unmarried Asians. Here, you can fuck without having to worry about Mom or Dad walking in and seeing you punching mochi all night long. Surprisingly, the motels are often chic and well decorated, and they only cost about $40 to $50 per day. But for some reason, most people just use them for a couple hours, re-creating all the poses they see from the FREE in-room porn.

Tits, boobies, knockers, melons, breasts, tatas and fun bags. No matter what you call them, they're awesome. More awesome than a sweet ass, though? That's a debate that philosophers have long argued but never settled. But can't we all agree that both are magical in their own special way? From my girlfriends' experiences (and mine...can't deny it), we've come up with the following tendencies: American boys go for the asses when they kiss girls, and Korean boys, as awkward as the position can be, go for the boobies as they kiss girls. God damn mama's boys!

People often assume that South Koreans don't like North Koreans, but the truth is that North Koreans are often the friends and family of their neighbors to the south. The people that Koreans really hate are the Japanese. And who can blame them? Japan colonized Korea for 36 years until the 1940s. That shit tends to breed hostility. Other than the Japanese, who Koreans hate with a special passion, Koreans are ready to insult everybody with pretty much equal opportunity.

POPPY KOREAN

HANGUK YUHAENGEO

한국 유행어

As with many Asian countries, American pop culture has had a huge influence in Korea. Fast food chains like McDonald's are ubiquitous, and Western-style fashion is all the rage. But Korean culture is made up of more than just Western rip-offs. In the past few years there has been a surge in exports of Korean pop culture, including TV dramas, music and movies. Dubbed the “Korean Wave,” the cultural phenomenon helped raise Korea's profile and boost tourism.

There are four main Korean TV channels: SBS, KBS1, KBS2 and MBC. These stations show the most popular shows on TV. Korean TV shows don't have many commercial breaks—unlike those on American TV. (Seriously, did you ever watch

The Chappelle Show? There were more commercial breaks than jokes on that show. I'm still mad about this. Come back to us, Dave. Come back!)

Let's watch a...

...boja.

soap opera.

Drama

드라마

Well-known for love triangles and tragic storylines, Korean dramas (akin to American soap operas) are extremely popular throughout Asia. Korean television shows have gotten so popular that tons of Japanese tourists come to Korea to visit the areas where the scenes were filmed. Popular dramas include Winter Sonata, Iris, Queen Seokdeok, Boys Over Flower and Jewel in the Palace.

KOREAN TV SHOWS

High Kick!

Jibungttulko Haikick

시봉뚫고 하이킥

Literally, "High kick through the roof." This immensely popular sitcom portrays three generations of family members living together under one roof and getting into hijinks. Ever seen Everybody Loves Raymond? Kinda like that but everyone stuffed into the same house.

Ya, i bbangkku ttongkkuya!

야 이 똥구똥꼬야!

Literally, "fart and anal." This catch phrase from High Kick! has made its way into the Korean lexicon. You are basically calling someone stupid in a light-hearted, adorable way.

Uchassa / Gaegeuconsseoteu

웃찾사 / 개그콘서트

Korean comedy uses a lot of self-deprecating humor and can be really hilarious. These two programs should provide some yucks—they're like Saturday Night Live with some stand-up thrown in. Koreans have no problem creating comedy gold by talking shit about themselves.

Infinite Challenge

Muhandojeon

무한도전

Infinite Challenge is similar in concept to Amazing Race and American Idol. The difference is that the contestants are popular celebrities like Jae-suk Yoo (유재석), Hyeong-don Jeong (정형돈), Myung-soo Park (박명수), Hong-chul No (노홍철), Jun-ha Jun (정준하) and Gil (길)—all middle-aged, goofy entertainers. This show has become so popular that it has guest celebrities from all over the world like Paris Hilton, Tiger Woods, Maria Sharapova and soccer star Thierry Daniel Henry.

Ha, it's a piece of cake!

Cham swibjo-ing!

참 쉽조잉!

This biting catch phrase became popular when Infinite Challenge contestant Jae-suk Yoo sarcastically said, "Ha, it's a piece of cake!" to other contestants who were struggling with their missions.

Family Outing

Familiga Tteotda

패밀리가 떴다

In the first season of this reality/variety show, pop stars like Jae-suk Yoo (big time MC), Lee Hyo-ri (the Britney Spears of Korea), Jong-shin Yoon (singer-songwriter) and Jong-guk Kim (popular singer) assume the duties of an everyday Korean family at a different traditional countryside home every week. While the celebrities do the housework, the hard-working family takes a well-deserved vacation.

One Night Two Days

Ilbak I-il

일박이일

Similar to the The Simple Life, this show features celebrities visiting the countryside to perform tasks outside their comfort zone. Unlike bitchy socialite stars Paris Hilton and Nicole Richie, however, the Korean counterparts are modest, hard-working celebs—much more appealing to the Korean viewers.

We Got Married

Uri Gyeolhonhaesseoyo

우리 결혼했어요

This surreal reality TV show depicts celebrity couples living pretend married lives. It sounds absurd, but it shows the dynamics of how different people live and work together to make their relationship successful.

Kiss Kiss Kiss

Bbobbobbo

뽀뽀뽀

This is kinda like a Korean Sesame Street: A bunch of kids and characters play and dance around and learn valuable life lessons.

.....Movies

Hanguk yeonghwa

한국영화

Korean movies have gained popularity throughout Asia and the U.S. Hollywood has even adapted several Korean movies into American films (e.g., The Lake House, starring Keanu Reeves and Sandra Bullock). Of course, I definitely recommend watching the originals. Even with subtitles, you'll get the morals behind the stories rather than just seeing the American glitz and big-name actors.

Old Boy

Old Boy

올드 보이

Influenced by Chinese kung fu flicks, this movie broke out of the stereotypical Korean movie storyline, which usually features a love triangle with the inevitable tragic ending. In fact, the style resembles Kill Bill, which also borrows heavily from China's distinctive action movies. From the movie:

Who are you?

Nugunya neon?

누구나 넌?

Sympathy for Lady Vengeance

Chinjeolhan Geumjassi

친절한 금사씨

Cut from the same cloth as Old Boy (it is done by the same director, Chan-wook Park), this movie stars Young-ae Lee, one of Korea's top ingénue actresses who is known for her innocent roles. Here, she's opened up a can of bad ass and transformed herself into a revenge-seeking murderer. From the movie:

Do good to yourself.

Neona jal hasaeyo.

너나 잘 하세요.

My Sassy Girl

Yeogijeogin Geunyeo

엽기적인 그녀

If you want to get a Korean girlfriend, watch this movie and learn how to become her servant. If you're in Korea looking for a submissive Asian girl, you're knocking on the wrong door—try Japan. From the movie:

Do you wanna die?

Jugeullae?

죽으래?

The Lake House

Siworae

시워에

Sandra Bullock and Keanu Reeves ruined this movie in the American version. Damn, the Hollywood remake's time-travel sequences don't make any sense at all!

A Tale of Two Sisters

Janghwa Hongryeon

장화홍련

Cinderella's and Snow White's evil stepmothers pale in comparison to the Korean stepmom in A Tale of Two Sisters. This horror flick is based on the Korean traditional tale Janghwa

CARTOONS)))

MANHWA

만화

Anime

Ilbon manhwa yeonghwa

일본만화영화

Japanese anime is very popular in Korea. Sailor Moon, Pokemon, Dragonball and other classics were airing here way before they were imported to America. If you're an anime fan you'll find a lot of friends in Korea. Let your geek flag fly!

Animation (usually refers to Korean anime)

Manhwa yeonghwa

만화영화

Protagonists in Korean animations are more human than the fantastical, sci-fi characters with magical powers coming out of Japan. Some of the most famous shows are Dooyi [두리]—the story of a time-traveling baby dinosaur; Hani [하니]—the tale of an orphan girl who becomes a runner; and Dokgotak [독고탁]—the story of a poor young boy who becomes a famous baseball player.

Manga

Manhwachaek

만화책

Being a comic-book nerd may not get you laid in the U.S., but you don't need to be shy about reading manhwachaek in Korea. It's an accepted part of pop culture and people talk about comic book characters like they're family members. A lot of manhwachaek stories get reproduced as TV shows and movies.

Hongryeon. Hollywood did a lame version (The Uninvited) and failed miserably! Viva Korean movies!

Swiri

스리

A spy story of North and South Korea. The lead actress, Yun-jin Kim, is probably best known in the U.S. for her role in the TV series Lost.

Mother

Mother

마더

Mothers will do anything for their children, but the mom in this pic really goes to the extreme. When the lead character's retarded but sweet (in her eyes) son is arrested for murder, she decides to independently find the "real" murderer. It's a very uncomfortable psychological thriller with lots of close-up shots chronicling the emotional intensity. You will like it (cuz I tell you to).

Below are popular Korean movies that have been bought/co-produced by Hollywood and opened (and closed quickly) in the U.S.:

Thirst

Bakjwi

박쥐

A Christian priest undergoes surgery to become a vampire.

Host

Gwoemul

괴물

A mutated monster attacks Seoul; known as being the first Korean CGI movie entirely produced and animated within the country.

D-War

Diwo

디워

A former comedian, the dinosaur-obsessed Hyung-rae Shim came to Hollywood and made this film, which took seven years. D-War deals with Korean mythology of a special 1,000-year-old snake that would eventually become a dragon and rule the world.

pop group.pop group

팝 그룹

When 'N Sync and Destiny's Child were storming the pop charts in the '90s, the boy/girl-band trend caught on in Korea. Since then, there have been several successful groups such as HOT, Super Jr., Sechs Kies, Big Bang, SES and Finkl. Current girl groups Brown Eyed Girls, Wonder Girls (who even toured with the Jonas Brothers) and Girls' Generation have gotten so popular that Chinese imitations have sprung up.

Even the high-speed Internet that you see in the U.S. is too slow for them—Korea's upgraded their entire infrastructure to the ultra-ultra-fast fiber-optic connection that's not available to all Americans. And to further put Americans to shame, Koreans are rumored to be the best hackers around.

Gongi is a similar to Jacks. It's played using five colorful plastic tokens called gongitdol. Each player tosses the tokens on the

There are five levels, and players score points by tossing all five gongitdol and then catching them on the back of their hand. Play proceeds until the airborne token is dropped or other tokens are touched or moved unintentionally. It's sort of gay to play this if you are a full-grown man, but the game can be very entertaining.

Horseback game

Malttukbakki

말뚝박기

Sadly, this game doesn't involve an actual horse. It's a rough game mainly played by boys. Two teams are chosen and one team becomes the horse post. The "horses" make a chain by bending over and sticking their heads between their teammates' legs. The competing team then hops on the back of other team without letting it fall apart. When all the teammates are on the competitors back, the team leader plays Rock Paper Scissors with the other team leader to decide who will be the winner. It's popular with everyone from children to university students.

Video game

비디오 게임

Have I mentioned that Korean kids (mostly boys) love to play video games? Guys can sit in front of their computers killing all those little monsters for days without much rest. The addiction is so extreme, it's even killed someone. No, not like the violent American who shot his mom in the head when she took away his Xbox. A Korean teenager was found dead after locking himself in a room for a week. He played video games alone, without sleeping or eating, and his body eventually just stopped working from lack of nutrients and pure exhaustion. Other than that incident, I think video games are actually good for stimulating your brain. Try to battle your way into the world of Korean gamers.

Seoul's got a gambling area, but Koreans aren't allowed in. Casinos are only for visiting foreigners. So if you wanna be a high roller, you gotta bring your passport to get through the casino doors. Despite these restrictions, Koreans are still known as gamblers and can become highly addicted to betting it all. No worries, though; what they can't get in

한국에서 배고플때 하는말

If you're a vegetarian or vegan, don't come to Korea. Just don't. Korea is a meat country, and if you're not down with that, GTFO. Because of this carnivorous spirit, BBQ is big in Korea—and ridiculously delicious—but it can be pricey, mainly because Korean beef is almost three times more expensive than American beef. So you'll usually find pork being served as the meat of choice at these restaurants. The best Korean BBQ comes from the little hole-in-the-walls that you'll find in any city. Be sure to check one out for an authentic Korean experience.

Even bigger than BBQ is pork belly slices (samgyeopsal; 삼겹살). Koreans just loooooove this. And dog meat, though not eaten by a large percentage of people, and technically illegal, is still consumed by a small minority—which, though kind of disgusting, adequately shows you just how much Koreans really, really love their meat.

But of course, man cannot live on meat alone. And that's where rice comes in. Despite a steady decline in the country's rice consumption, Koreans still eat everything with rice. And by everything, I do mean everything. No matter what or when you're eating—be it breakfast, lunch or dinner—it's gonna come with rice.

.....At the restaurant

Eumsikjeomeseo

음식점에서

Restaurant service in Korea is generally top-notch. And as a wallet-friendly bonus, the food is really cheap. You can get a gourmet, home-cooked meal for the price of a latte. And the tax and tip are often included, as are constant refills of side dishes called banchan (반찬). Most small restaurants don't accept credit cards—cash is king. They also won't bring you a check unless you request it.

Another thing to remember: Don't sit around waiting for your server to take your order or clear your plate; you're expected to call them anytime you want them. Just don't be a dick about it, though—call them eonni (언니; “sister”), or imo (오모; “aunt”), in a friendly way. And don’t try to tip servers in Korea, because they might find it insulting. On the other hand, you can’t be too picky about your food. Korean restaurants aren’t like Burger King: You don’t get to have it your way. They don’t like to substitute or leave out ingredients for you. And it’s not common to ask for to-go or doggy bags, either.

Excuse me!

Jeogiyoyo!

저기요!

This is more commonly used than “excuse me” to call the wait staff. Servers in Korea won’t come to you unless you raise your hand and yell to get their attention!

Older Koreans traditionally take bills and pay for a whole table. However, the younger generation has adopted the custom of paying for oneself—mostly in an effort to save people from going broke. If you're taking a girl out on a date, though, don't be a cheap bastard. Guys are still expected to treat.

.....Popular Korean food*Hangukeui yumyeonghan yori*

한국의 유명한 요리

I love Korean food, and it's not just because I'm Korean. OK, maybe it is, but even non-natives will be amazed at the variety of offerings. The following are some of the tastiest and most popular dishes you'll encounter in your travels.

Rice*Bap*

밥

White rice is the country's main staple and is served in most Korean restaurants. Rice is so integral to the Korean diet, it's also a synonym for "food."

Mixed-grain rice

Japgokbap

잡곡밥

If you visit your Korean friend's family, you'll likely be served a multi-grained mix of rice.

Kimchi

Kimchi

김치

This is the most famous Korean side dish. The most well-known to Westerners is the fiery pickled-cabbage variety, but in reality there are more than 50 kinds of kimchis. Don't be afraid to try other variations made with turnips, cucumbers and onions—not all of them are spicy.

Ramen

Ramyeon

라면

Most Korean ramen consists of instant noodles that come in various flavors. It's been said that one university student lived off ramen for a month and died from lack of nutrients. So, I don't recommend eating too many packages, but it's good and cheap food for curing a hangover!

Udon

Udong

우동

This Japanese noodle soup is really popular in Korea.

Fried fish cakes

Odaeng

오징어

These fried fish cakes, served on a stick, are some of the most popular street foods in Korea. You may also see a sliced version show up in the myriad side dishes brought to the table at a Korean BBQ.

Seaweed rice roll

Kimbab

김밥

Kimbab is a Korean sushi roll. Mothers pack them for children's field trips—or if you have a lazy mom, she'll give you the 1,000 won (about a $1) it costs to just buy one.

Tempura

Twigim

튀김

Fried food is universally yummy. Even skinny Koreans can't resist the allure of crispy, greasy treats.

Spicy rice cake

Ddeokbeokgi

떡볶기

This rice cake dish, flavored with gochujang (고추장)—a condiment made with red chilies and fermented soybeans—is perfect for big groups of people at street vendors.

Pig-intestine noodle (Korean sausage)

Sundae

순대

I know it sounds gross, but it's one of the tastiest foods I've ever tried. The sausage is stuffed with clear noodles then soaked in pig blood to get its authentic and unique flavor. The dish also comes with a side of pig's ears, intestines and liver. Oink, oink!

Bibimbap

비빔밥

Literally, “mixed rice.” A combination of fresh vegetables and marinated meat with rice that you mix with gochujang.

Black bean noodles

Jjajangmyeon

짜장면

This dish uses the same fermented and salted black beans as seen in Chinese cookery, but jjajang (짜장) served over noodles is much thicker than the Chinese version.

Jjambbong

짜장뽕

A spicy noodle soup with seafood, jjambbong is a Chinese-Korean dish that's served in all Chinese restaurants in Korea.

Sushi

Chobap

초밥

Koreans typically like their sushi served nigiri style (raw fish over rice). However, ever since California rolls have become popular in Korea, there have been a lot more fusion maki rolls invented by Korean sushi chefs. How about maki sushi smothered in a sweet yogurt sauce? It just might be your next favorite thing to eat.

Sashimi

Hoe

회

Koreans use a spicy sauce called chogouchujjang (초고추장) for sashimi instead of the traditional wasabi.

Live sashimi

Hwareohoe

활어회

You choose a fish from a tank outside the restaurant; the live fish is then prepared for you on the spot. Expect a much thinner cut of sashimi than you're used to in the U.S.—the fresh flesh is so chewy, a thicker slice would make it harder to eat.

Pho

Weolnam guksu

웬남국수

Vietnamese rice noodle soup with sliced beef.

Beef stew

Seolleongtang

석령탕

Oxtail soup, normally boiled for a day to get all the rich calcium from the bone.

Pizza

Pizza

피자

If you're sick and tired of eating Korean BBQ with rice and crave some American food like pizza, you might not quite get what you're looking for. Pizza in Korea is healthy compared to the U.S. counterpart—it's less greasy and has more nutritious toppings, such as king shrimp, squid and corn.

Pig's feet

Jokbal

족발

Boiled pig

Bossam

보쌈

Chinese cabbage wrap with tender broiled pork.

Dog stew

Bosintang

보신탕

The concept of dog stew sounds pretty repugnant to Americans—most Koreans, too. But those who do eat the canine concoction do so in the belief that it restores health, which is reflected in the dish's name: Bosin literally means “restoring health to the body.”

Sliced rice pasta soup

Tteokguk

떡국

Traditional rice cake soup eaten on Lunar New Year's Day.

Dumpling soup

Manduguk

만두국

Soft tofu soup

Sundubu

순두부

Kimchi soup

Kimchijjigae

김치찌개

This spicy savory dish is traditionally prepared with pork, but don't be surprised to see pink slices of SPAM floating in the broth when prepared by the home cook. Sounds kinda gross, but it's not. Who would have thought that kimchi and SPAM could go so well together?

Seaweed soup

Miyeokguk

미역국

Koreans always have this on their birthdays. Women who've just given birth also consume this tasty broth, which is high in calcium and iron. Presto—the association with birthdays.

Korean pancake

Buchimgae

부침개

A savory, wheat flour pancake served as an appetizer or snack. It can include kimchi (surprise), green onions or even squid. The plain ones with just green onions are called pajeon (파전); they are good with soy sauce.

Shaved ice

Patbingsu

팥빙수

Shaved ice with red bean sauce, topped with mochi balls and fruit. It's the bomb.

Fried chicken

Tongdak

통닭

I don't want to brag, but Koreans fry one mean motherfucking chicken!

Italy has their gelato. Americans have their ice cream. Koreans have their frozen yogurt. Red Mango is the most well-known of Korean yogurt chains and has even become successful in the U.S.

.....Cafés

Cafe

Cafés in Korea are very fancy. American franchises like Starbucks are just like the ones in the U.S. However, you'll find some Korean twists at the native coffeehouse chains—latte flavors such as sweet potato and green tea cater to a decidedly Asian palate.
